Clarinet Targets Consumer VoIP

Tuesday, 25 April 2006

The Perth-based arm of Clarinet International, A VoIP technology and engineering company with offices in New York, Florida, Peru and Sydney is the latest VoIP provider to throw its hat in the Australian service provider ring. Clarinet actually launched a consumer service back in December 2005, but this is the first we have heard of them.

Established in 2004, Clarinet Australia offers plans at $24.95 and recommends a Linksys Series PAP2 adapter which it retails for $147.

The company says it has focused on reducing the cost of calls to mobiles and charges 27 cents per minute across all its plans.

However leading players such as Engin have achieved calls to mobiles as low as 23 cents per minute on some plans.

Local calls are charged at a flat 10 cents un-timed, while national calls are 10 cents per minute while International calls are as low as 3.5 cents to the US and UK or 74 cents per minute to Antarctica.

One plan offers all you can eat local and national calls for the cost of the $24.95 subscription.

There are three $24.95 plans to choose from each offering a different bundle of includes.

The company says its three core executives have, between them, built four telecommunications carriers located in the UK, Caribbean, US and Australia.
